What you may say

See `talking-points.md` : ten sentences that are true and checkable on vanplot.com. Anything else you say about the product should be something you saw on your own screen.

What you must say

A disclosure on every post, per your country's rules. Copy-paste lines in `disclosure-lines.md` . Tick YouTube's "paid promotion" box on integrations.

What VanPlot won't do

No invented user counts, no testimonials, no "trusted by thousands". If you're asked for numbers like that, the honest answer is "it launched in September 2026 and the guy who made it hasn't built his van yet".

Page 2 — three ways to publish, pick one

A. Five minutes: post a ready reel

1. Download one of the three vertical reels from vanplot.com/press (or the Drive folder).
2. Add your own audio if you want; they ship silent.
3. Paste the matching caption from `caption-bank.md`, replace `{{CODE}}` and `{{LINK}}`.
4. Post. Done.

B. One hour: record 60 seconds of your own screen

1. Open `{{LINK}}` and start a project on your own van type (your licence is active, no timer).
2. Do three things on camera: drag a heavy item (water tank, battery) and watch the axle bar; open Build Stats; open the Build Sheet and scroll the cut list.
3. Say what you see. The numbers do the selling; you don't have to.
4. Feature clips from the kit (silent, no text overlay) fit under your voice if you need cutaways.

C. Long-form integration (90 seconds inside a build video)

Suggested shape:

- 0–15 s: where you are in your build and what you were unsure about (fit, weight, cost).
- 15–60 s: your own van in the planner, one real decision made on screen.
- 60–80 s: what it doesn't do yet, in your words.
- 80–90 s: "link and code in the description".

Assets: six feature clips, the 30-second founder clip, thumbnail backgrounds, talking points.

Want a reel of your own layout?

Send your van model, length and a rough sketch to affiliates@vanplot.com. You get back a watermarked vertical reel of your layout assembling itself in the planner, usually by the next day.
